To Whom It May Concern:

I'm writing this reference at the request of Dr. Laurie Lattimore-Volkmann, who is nominated for College of Charleston's Distinguished Adjunct Faculty Award. I graduated with a communication degree from College of Charleston in 2013, and was lucky enough to have Dr. Lattimore-Volkmann (also known as Dr. LV), as one of my communication professors.

Dr. LV's class left a considerable mark on my education. As the years pass, I may not be able to remember the exact name of the class I took with her, but I'll never forget the amount of time she dedicated to help me succeed in school and in my career.

Dr. LV truly cares about each one of her student's performance in class and teaches them how to apply their knowledge to the real world. Her impressive and relevant work experience (which seems to be endless), gives her more leverage as a teacher to prepare her students for their future careers.

Not only did I have the privilege to be part of her energetic class, I was also lucky enough to work with her professionally in the beginning of my career. In both experiences, she helped me discover my writing style and fine-tune my communication and marketing skills. Although I don't work with her anymore, I constantly find myself missing Dr. LV's kind, thoughtful, and witty critique – not to mention her brilliant advice.

I highly recommend Dr. LV for the Distinguished Adjunct Faculty Award. She is truly deserving of this prestigious award.

Sincerely,
